How we produce Country Finance

- What are the sources of data used in Country Finance?

Each member of our global network of analysts gathers information on his or her country of expertise and residence. These specialists turn their work over to regional editors in New York who check it against their own knowledge and figures from our extensive database on interest rates, exchange-rate movements and stockmarket index changes. These data are presented in easy-to-read chart formats. The managing editor ensures consistency in coverage of topics and style of presentation across the series.

- Who writes Country Finance?

Our correspondents in the field revise annually the Country Finance reports for each of 45 markets. These analysts, many of whom have worked on successive editions over the years, gather locally available information and write their initial drafts. To accomplish their task they follow local press accounts, seek regulatory and statistical information from government agencies, and conduct interviews with the managers of domestic and foreign businesses.
